Japan PM accepts blame for election defeat Miki almost says he'll resign

TOKYO. — Japanese Prime Minister Takeo Miki, assuming responsibility for his ruling party's losses in Sunday's general election, yesterday indicated that he will soon resign.

Officials of Miki's Liberal Democratic Party (LDP) quoted the 69-year-old leader as telling senior colleagues: "I feel grave responsibility for the results of the election. I do not intend to avoid my responsibility."

Party secretary-general Tanoue Uchida told reporters that Miki, Prime Minister since December 1974, was expected to announce early next week whether he will step down. Party sources felt it was almost certain that he would resign. Miki and the party executives agreed to convene an extraordinary session of the Diet (Parliament) about December 25 to nominate the next Prime Minister.

The Prime Minister's statement followed the LDP's failure to win a majority in a new enlarged 511-seat lower house, which seemed certain to end its 21 years of continuous one-party rule.

The pro-American conservative party won 249 seats in the election, seven short of a majority. However, it increased its strength to 257 later when eight elected conservative independents joined the ruling party.

Miki has faced a persistent drive for his ouster by his foes within the LDP over his handling of the Lockheed Aircraft Corp. payoff scandal. His pledge to make a thorough probe into the case drew opposition.

The anti-Miki drive is led by former Finance Minister and Deputy Prime Minister Takeo Fukuda, 71, who missed chances of becoming Prime Minister twice before. Fukuda now has strong support in the ruling party.

Fukuda was regarded as the strongest successor to the late Prime Minister Masaki Sato, who stepped down in 1972. He was defeated in the presidential election by Kakuei Tanaka who enlisted the support of Miki and Finance Minister Masayoshi Ohira, another contender to the post. After Tanaka stepped down as Prime Minister under the Lockheed case corruption charges, Miki was named Tanaka's successor as a compromise choice over Fukuda and Ohira in November, 1974.

Gaddafi tells Soviets: No faith in Geneva

MOSCOW. — Libyan leader Muammar Gaddafi and Kremlin leaders held a second round of talks yesterday after airing their differences on ways of resolving the Middle East problem.

Gaddafi, who is visiting Moscow for the first time, let his Soviet hosts know in a speech Monday night that he does not share their faith in a reconvened Geneva peace conference.

After listening to President Nikolai Podgorniy express support for an over-all settlement within the framework of a Geneva conference, he declared that "not too much significance should be attached to conference."

Details have been scant about the way the Kremlin discussions have gone, but Western diplomatic observers believe Soviet leaders may be seeking to persuade Gaddafi to moderate his stand.

Gaddafi also denounced the U.S. for working against the Arabs in the Middle East and said American policy was leading the world to a "cataclysm."

Western diplomats said the presence at the talks of the commander-in-chief of Libyan armed forces, Lt-Col. Abu Bakr Yunus Jaber, making his second visit to Moscow in two months, and Soviet First Deputy Defence Minister Sergei Sokolov indicated more Soviet arms supplies to Libya figured in the talks. Sokolov apparently stood in for Soviet Defence Minister Dimitri Ustinov, who is on an official visit to Bulgaria.

'Stampa': Libya deal won't affect us

TURIN. — The Fiat-owned newspaper "La Stampa," one of Italy's major dailies, gave front-page prominence yesterday to an assurance from the car company that Libya's recent purchase of a stake in Fiat would not affect its independence.

"La Stampa" said the paper's board had taken note of the assurance given on Monday by Fiat chairman Giovanni Agnelli that the company's purchase of more than 9 per cent in Fiat "will have no effect on the traditional and complete autonomy of the paper's political line."

Concern had been expressed in some quarters at the possible effect on "La Stampa" of the Libyan deal, especially in the light of unsuccessful demands made by Libyan leader Muammar Gaddafi three years ago for the dismissal of the paper's Jewish editor, Arrigo Levi. (Reuters)

Arafat ends talks with Ceausescu

BUCHAREST. — Palestine Liberation Organization chief Yasser Arafat left here yesterday for an unknown destination after a two-day visit that included talks with Rumanian President Nicolae Ceausescu.

During a toast at a luncheon on Monday, Arafat said: "We shall do everything so as not to interfere in the internal affairs of any Arab state."

Apparently having been told by Ceausescu that such interference would be a mistake, Arafat added "we shall never forget this friendly advice of yours."

Ceausescu urged that the Geneva talks on the Middle East should be resumed with the participation of the PLO. (AP, UPI)

Boycotters will lose state contracts

BOSTON. — Massachusetts Gov. Michael Dukakis signed an executive order Monday prohibiting businesses holding state contracts to participate in the Arab economic boycott of Israel.

Dukakis is believed to be the first governor in the nation to approve such a regulation.

Dukakis said the Arab boycott directed against Israel and against firms that do business with Israel from participating in the Arab boycott is "clear interference with our constitutionally guaranteed civil and human rights."

Any firm contracting with the state government after January 1, 1977, for an amount of $5,000 or more, must agree to participate in an international boycott. Otherwise, the state can cancel the contract.

A state law, effective January 1, 1977, prohibits Massachusetts firms from participating in the Arab boycott. (AP)

Nato members to review common defence spending

BRUSSELS. — The Nato countries have decided to review their contributions to the alliance's common defence system in view of the growing Soviet military threat, according to a draft Nato communiqué made available to Reuters yesterday.

The document, to be published today at the end of a Nato defence ministers' meeting, calls for a real increase in defence spending by member states.

It says it is necessary to review Nato contributions for 1977 in order to remedy serious deficiencies. However, the ministers still have to decide whether to retain the word "serious" in the final communiqué.

The defence ministers' move became known as Nato's senior military chief yesterday criticised Nato governments for not spending enough on defence as the Soviet Union relentlessly builds up its military strength.

British Admiral of the Fleet Sir Peter Hill-Norton, chairman of Nato's military committee, said that the biggest weakness in the alliance was lack of defence spending.

The defence ministers' talks are part of the annual winter sessions for the 16-nation alliance. The meetings will culminate on Friday in

Secretary of State Henry Kissinger's farewell.

Kissinger and other Nato foreign ministers will take over from their defence colleagues tomorrow to analyze the progress of East-West dialogue and discuss major political crises, including the Middle East and the critical situation in South Africa.

Kissinger left Washington yesterday on probably his last diplomatic mission as Secretary of State carrying a message of support for Carter from President-elect Jimmy Carter.

The message, given to Kissinger by Carter in Plains, two weeks ago, pledges the new President's commitment to transatlantic ties.

Strains have eased considerably since the U.S. was accusing the Europeans only two years ago of hostility on the economic and political front. The Brussels meetings are viewed as a pleasant overseas farewell for Kissinger, who has globe-trotted more than 890,000 km. in three years as Secretary of State.

With Carter's backing, Kissinger hopes to boost Western resolve to maintain a first-rate defence, despite domestic pressures building in Britain and elsewhere to cut costs as an anti-inflationary measure. (AP, Reuters)

Rhodesians fear guerrillas killed missing priest

SALISBURY. — Missionary officials said yesterday they feared for the life of a Swiss Roman Catholic priest who has been missing for four days — during which three white missionaries have been shot dead by a black guerrilla.

Father George Oregier, 45, was last seen four days ago outside a store in the Nyajema tribal reserve, a known hiding place for Black guerrillas about 300 km. south of Salisbury, the Rhodesian capital.

Police in Western Rhodesia were still searching with tracker dogs and helicopters for the black guerrilla who stopped two German priests and two German nuns on the highway between Bulawayo and the Victoria national falls park on Sunday, demanded money and opened fire on them with a machine-gun when they told him they had none.

Meanwhile, efforts to save the Rhodesia talks at Geneva will be stepped up when U.S. Secretary of State Henry Kissinger will arrive in Britain on Friday for talks on possible measures to find a common formula that will satisfy Rhodesia's whites and the four black factions represented at Geneva.

Officials said the British Government is deeply worried by the deadlock in the slow-moving Geneva talks. The conference has been meeting for six weeks to try and reach an agreement on an interim government under the Kissinger plan to pave the way for ultimate transfer of power to a black majority administration. ## Australia ups dollar value

SYDNEY. — The Australian Government increased the value of the Australian dollar against foreign currencies yesterday by two per cent.

Prime Minister Malcolm Fraser's office said the move was made because speculation in the dollar had stopped following the 17.5 per cent devaluation on November 28. The statement said capital inflow had resumed and it was now appropriate to revalue the currency's value.

The new U.S. dollar value was $1.0886 compared with Monday's rate of $1.0129. The Australian dollar was worth $1.2354 prior to devaluation. (AP, Reuters)

Heath in open revolt against Thatcher

LONDON. — The long-simmering feud between former Conservative Prime Minister Edward Heath and Margaret Thatcher, who ousted him from the party leadership in 1975, has erupted into the open.

Heath Monday night placed himself squarely at the point of rebellion against Mrs. Thatcher's authority among Conservative Party Members of Parliament.

In a speech at Glasgow he said he will defy her orders and not vote against a Labour Government bill that will give limited home rule and their own assemblies to Scotland and Ireland.

Heath demanded total opposition to the bill by all the 280 Tories in the Commons. He said: "It is unthinkable that those of us who have for so long believed in this principle should be expected to vote against it."

About 20 Tories are known to be unhappy over the Devolution Bill, as it is called. If they abstain in future votes during its progress through Parliament, the bill is certain to win approval and the image of a Tory party united and determined to drive Labour from office will be tarnished.

The Heath-Thatcher split has been a major talking point in British politics for two years. Heath made no secret of his resentment that his party deserted him after he led it to defeat while defying the minor's demand for more pay in 1974. The choice of a woman — the first to lead a British political party — made the blow more bitter.

The rebels with Heath on the devolution include half a dozen Scottish lawmakers in the Tory leadership, who are sensitive to the clamour in their constituencies that Scotland be allowed more say in their own affairs. There is a group of about 30 Tory supporters of Heath in the Commons who dislike the tough, right-wing policies of Mrs. Thatcher and the men around her. (AP, UPI)

Nuclear expert seen new U.S. defence chief

ATLANTA. — President-elect Jimmy Carter yesterday began interviewing leading candidates for his cabinet, amid reports that Dr. Harold Brown has emerged as the leading contender for the post of Secretary of Defense.

Brown, a former Secretary of the Air Force and director of defence research under the Johnson Administration, is now President of the California Institute of Technology. He was virtually certain to be named the Pentagon chief, a source close to Carter aides said in Washington on Monday.

Brown, a 46-year-old nuclear physicist who was on the U.S. negotiating team in the strategic arms (SALT) talks with the Soviet Union, said that he was flying to Atlanta and would see Carter today. But he said he did not know anything beyond this.

Michael Brumathel, the chairman and chief executive officer of the Bendix Corporation, and former Defence Secretary James Schlesinger, have also been mentioned as being under serious consideration.

Sources noted that Brown would be an ideal complement to Cyrus Vance, who was named by Carter last week to be his Secretary of State.

Vance is widely known for his skills as a negotiator and since being named Secretary of State has indicated that a nuclear arms agreement would have top priority in the new Carter administration. Brown is one of America's top nuclear scientists and has been a member of the U.S. SALT negotiat-

Bomb found in Carter office

WASHINGTON. — Transitioners for President-elect Jimmy Carter found a bomb in their office Monday. It was defused by a bomb squad.

The bomb was contained in a package found in the mailroom of the 25th floor offices in the Department of Health, Education and Welfare North Building being vacated by the Carter transition team. The offices were evacuated and the bomb taken outside and defused. It was then turned over to the Federal Bureau of Investigation.

Kissinger, Vance hold first transition talks

WASHINGTON. — Secretary of State Henry Kissinger and Cyrus Vance, the man who will succeed him on January 20, held their first meeting, traded compliments, and pledged frequent consultations in coming weeks.

Vance told reporters he "would not hesitate to use Kissinger's great talents if the occasion arises." Kissinger grinned broadly.

The two men met in the Secretary's office late Monday and Vance later said the meeting would be repeated frequently.

"We'll be spending a great deal of time together while I learn from him," he said.

Cordially aside, it was clear Vance means to move quickly to take over the State Department as soon as the new Administration comes to power. He said he had to shuttle almost daily between Washington and New York, where he was winding down his law practice, to begin to work full-time in the transition office that had been set up on the first floor of the Department building.

Their meeting was the first President-elect Carter design the Wall Street lawyer to be the new Secretary of State.

However, Kissinger noted that paths have crossed before in earnest service. "All I ask," he told Vance reporters, "is that (reporters) treat you as they treat me." (Los Angeles Times, AP, UPI)

A DOCTOR'S NOTE-BOOK / Dr. David Samson

A painful decision

EVERY DOCTOR'S attitude to prescribing drugs is affected by several factors. Notably his professional background and training, his personal experience of the drugs involved and the stream of information he receives about current developments and clinical research in pharmacology.

When it comes, for example, to suggesting a minor analgesic (pain-killer) drug for one of my patients, or for myself for that matter, my own approach is influenced to some extent by all these factors. By minor analgesics, I mean those drugs useful in treating the minor aches and pains we are all subject to from time to time — not the more severe sorts of pain associated with, say, some chronic joint diseases.

I must admit that my own outlook towards such drugs is rather conservative. I probably don't employ more than four or five different types in coping with minor pain syndromes. My favorite choices in this field are good old-fashioned aspirin and paracetamol. Both have proved themselves reliable allies over and over again.

One or two tablets of aspirin gives prompt relief of moderate pain in most people without any subjective or objective side-effects. In a small minority of people, aspirin may sometimes cause stomach upset and occasionally bleeding of a lesser or greater degree from the gastrointestinal tract. Therefore, it is contra-indicated in patients who have or have had any stomach trouble, such as an ulcer or indigestion.

Alcohol ingestion at or near the same time as taking the aspirin seems to provoke this undesirable side-effect, and so-called "buffered" aspirin does not offer any protection. Old folk, too, seem to be at greater risk. For the elderly and others for whom aspirin is not suitable, I prescribe paracetamol. I find it is usually about as effective as aspirin in its pain-reducing properties and without aspirin's adverse effect on the stomach.

In the rare cases where the use of both of the above is contra-indicated or not followed by any great therapeutic success, I may try codeine instead. The use of codeine is often criticised on the grounds that it is a drug of addiction. Most authorities would agree that this danger has probably been exaggerated and that its addiction potential is, in fact, low.

The misconception may be a result of the aura of potency associated with other drugs in the narcotic group (morphine, etc) of which codeine is a member. Occasionally,

Some 50 different preparations are available in Israel to use as minor analgesics (pain-killers), and the public may take them indiscriminately. Here Kipat Holim patients with prescriptions from their doctors, line up at a sick fund pharmacy. (P.C.A.)

I may try a drug containing a combination of the drugs mentioned above, and this additive effect sometimes does the trick.

Perhaps it is just as important to mention pain-killers which I try not to use and why. I avoid drugs, containing singly or in combination, dipyrone, amidopyrine, phenacetin or barbiturates, to single out the most important ones. The first three have been associated with such potentially serious side-effects that I do not feel their use can be justified, as they do not possess any significant advantage clinically over other drugs in this group.

Drugs containing dipyrone or amidopyrine can only be sold in the U.S., if the package states clearly that the drug may cause a fatal blood disease. These two drugs, as well as phenacetin, are not generally used at all in Britain, although in fairness it should be pointed out that they are still popular in continental Europe. Barbiturates are included with analgesics for their sedative effect.

This may indeed be desirable under certain circumstances. I prefer to give any sedation separately, especially when dealing with children in whom habituations may actually cause exactly the opposite of the desired calming effect.

All this is not to say that dangers have never been associated with these drugs. The chief danger described, apart from accidental or intentional overdose, has been attributed to their prolonged and continuous consumption over many years. Preparations containing aspirin, paracetamol, phenacetin, amidopyrine and certain less commonly used drugs have been thought to cause slow destruction of kidney function when used in this way over a long period. Good recovery may occur if the practice is stopped in time. Originally this was a danger believed due only to phenacetin, but the evidence for this has become less convincing. It is now accepted that any or all of the drugs listed above may be responsible for kidney damage if taken regularly for long enough.

These minor analgesics are also readily available, alone or in combination form, "over-the-counter" without a prescription. Take a look at what the products currently on the market actually contain. There are about 50 different preparations in this category. Some are household names. Of these, five each contain only aspirin or only paracetamol, and two contain both combined. Two contain codeine alone, and there are four other "combination" drugs in the list, which I would consider prescribing for my patients, or for my family, if that I do use. Ten of the drugs contain barbiturates in one form or another, along with the analgesic component; 13 contain phenacetin; and 14 contain dipyrone or amidopyrine. All in all, there are only about 20 preparations which fit my prescribing habits. I discard the remainder as unsuitable for reasons I've already outlined.

Many medical people in Israel believe that control over the sale of these drugs should be much tighter, or they should be available by prescription only, in view of the harmful effects associated with their long-term use. There is also a good case for stopping the sale of certain of these drugs altogether.

Nothing written here is intended to deter the judicious use of a minor analgesic for that head-ache or aching back we all experience now and again. But taking all the known evidence into account, it would not seem amiss to give a warning against excessive use of all common minor analgesic preparations.

All kinds of latkes

PANCAKES of one kind or another have been traditional for Hanukkah since the Middle Ages. Some people say the oil in which they are fried is reminiscent of the Hanukkah miracle of the cruse of oil; others say the Maccabees ate pancakes for added strength.

Whatever the origin, here are a variety of pancake recipes for the holiday.

POTATO LATKES
6 servings
6 peeled potatoes
1 medium onion
2 eggs
1/2 t. salt
1/4 t. pepper
1/2 cup flour
oil
1. Grate potatoes and onion into a mixing bowl. Add eggs, salt, pepper and flour.
2. Heat oil in the frying pan until hot. Drop tablespoons of batter around pan and fry until brown on both sides. Drain on paper towels, place on plate in oven to keep warm until serving.

MARILYN'S CHEESE PANCAKES
4-6 servings
500 grams soft white cheese
2 eggs
3 T. corn-flour
1 heaping T. jam
1 heaping T. sugar
pinch salt
oil
1. Combine cheese, eggs and corn-flour in a mixing bowl and blend well. Add jam, sugar and salt and mix.
2. Heat oil in frying pan until hot. Drop teaspoons of batter around pan and fry until brown on both sides.

EGGPLANT PANCAKES
4 servings
1 large eggplant
2 eggs
1 medium onion, finely chopped
1/2 large cloves garlic, crushed
salt and pepper to taste
1/4-1/2 cup bread crumbs
oil
1. Peel eggplant and cut into small cubes. Place in saucepan with enough water to cover. Add onion and garlic. Cook 20 minutes or until easily mashed with a fork. If you have a pressure cooker, place eggplant, onion and garlic in pressure cooker with 1/2 cup water. Cook at 15 pounds pressure for 3 minutes after control jiggles.
2. Drain off water whichever way you cook vegetables, place in a bowl and mash well. Add eggs, salt and pepper and bread crumbs.
3. Form into patties, put on a plate and refrigerate for about one hour.
4. Heat oil in frying pan. Fry patties on both sides until brown.

NAOMI'S APPLE PANCAKES
4 servings
4 tart apples
3 T. lemon juice
2 T. butter or margarine
1 cup flour
1 cup milk
1 t. salt
6 beaten eggs
powdered (confectioner's) sugar
1. Peel and slice apples thin. Mix with 2 T. lemon juice.
2. Melt butter or margarine in a skillet and saute apples until they are glazed.
3. Combine flour, milk and salt in a mixing bowl. Add beaten eggs. Continue beating until batter is well mixed. Pour over apple mixture. If your skillet is not good in an oven, transfer whole apple and batter mixture to a pie plate or baking dish.
4. Place skillet or baking dish in 450°F (230°C) oven and bake 20 minutes. Reduce oven to 350°F (180°C) and bake 10 minutes more.
5. Remove from oven. Sprinkle with 1 T. lemon juice and lots of powdered sugar. Serve at once.

Computerizing Responsa

WOLF BLATZER
Jewish Post Correspondent
YON. — The National Endowment for the Humanities (NEH) has granted to support two Jewish studies: the one of a script for an film on the Holocaust and the other of a computerized of Hebrew Responsa.

The NEH projects will include grant of $175,000 additional offer of gifts-and-matching the "Hebrew Responsa Project," to be coordinated by Dr. Haim Haim Yeshiva University in New York.

"Hebrew Responsa" is a computerized project, a collection of questions and answers by rabbis and scholars on religious, social matters posed by communities and individuals in the world. Primarily in rabbinic and Aramaic, these "provide valuable information in the areas of law, comparative philosophy, history, and literature, according to the project. The project will involve the computerized programming of over 50,000 "Responsa" (about 50 million words), and will be directed by Aaron M. Schreiber, a rabbi and Professor of Law at Temple University in Philadelphia.

Dr. Ronald S. Berman, NEH chairman, announced last month that a script is to be written for a dramatic 90-minute, historical film which will examine the experiences of the victims of the Nazi occupation of Poland. The film will be supported by a $16,544 NEH grant.

According to Dr. Berman, it will be based on a documented and historically accurate reconstruction of events in a Jewish ghetto established by the Nazis and will attempt to show how resulting pressures, coupled with deeply-rooted feelings of community solidarity and family ties, created unique moral dilemmas for the ghetto residents.

"The film will explore the ways in which people deal with these dilemmas and will provide an opportunity to examine the operation of human values under stress," NEH said in a statement. Haim Haim, an independent filmmaker and screen writer, is to prepare the script.

58-plus help for Shlomi

By HADASSAH BAT HAIM

NAHARIYA. — After a few false starts, the "58" project now has a small but firm foothold in the village of Shlomi near the Lebanese border. The development town, recently featured on a television programme on poverty, and it has welcomed the efforts of the men and women, aged 58 and over, who have come to lend a helping hand.

So far only organizer Alisa Minski, a former biology teacher, has been allotted an apartment, but the eventual aim is for all who take part in the plan to settle in the town and become part of the community.

In England, a similar section, known as "A Bridge to Israel," exploits the skills and talents of older people who, though they may be pensioners, still feel they have many useful and productive years before them. Israel can well reap the harvest of experience and expertise of these senior citizens, some groups have already proved their worth on kibbutzim where they are regarded, as among the most diligent and conscientious workers.

So far a mechanical workshop and a handicraft centre for making and learning to operate puppets have been set up in Shlomi. Shortly to be opened are a drama class, a knitting circle and a place where auxiliary help will be given in English studies.

Many retired persons who would not like to end their days in a "retirement home" welcome the possibility of getting a new apartment within reach of others of like minds near enough to get neighbourly assistance if it should be needed. It could offer an attractive future to people who are old enough to retire and young enough to want to start a new life.

8. So what is he doing with his Saturdays?
9. He formed an opposition group.
10. With me it's my business; it isn't good.
11. Mazal tov! Last time you said it was terrible.
12. I'm doing better with Mifal Hapayis.
13. You win from Mifal Hapayis?
14. No. I sell tickets on the side.

MORIAM
Elihu Goldenberg

Dedicated to his art

year and a half ago I found speaking to a grey-haired smallish man, with clear conveyed friendship whilst coming home. I was an actor extended visit to Israel and the man was Idenberg. I thought of acting during here but was introduced to Idenberg who was looking for actors to take part with an English version of his n of Shalom Aleichem's title "Men" (Die Kleine ech). The weeks of rehearsal, I know Elihu the director, and the man. In direction his aim was perfection. As a man, he had aim and did not fall short. Frustrations and difficulties. lost patience and always set the rest of us. I feel that I am a better per- a better actor, for having

A welcome initiative

ISRAEL'S FOREIGN policy-makers are regularly accused of displaying a peculiar reluctance to take the diplomatic initiative. The usual defence is that their ideas, however constructive and honourable, are apt to be misinterpreted, twisted around, and ultimately defeated. The practical result, however, has been to leave the field wide open for Israel's foes, whose machinations must then be laboriously exposed and discredited.

Ambassador Chaim Herzog's action on Monday in tabling Israel's first — or, at most, second — draft resolution in the General Assembly's entire history is therefore to be welcomed. The text, worked out on instructions from Foreign Minister Yigal Allon, calls on Egypt, Israel, Syria and Jordan to "reconvene without delay at the Geneva peace conference" in order to negotiate, "without prior conditions," a just and durable settlement of the Middle East conflict.

The resolution, which has only Israel for a sponsor, could not have been submitted in the belief that it had any chance of acceptance by the Assembly. Indeed, no sooner was it made public than a group of pro-Arab "non-aligned" countries rushed to undermine it by offering an amendment, which would invite the PLO to take part in the conference.

What the Israel draft unmistakably conveyed was that the minimum requirement for participation is the acceptance of the explicit obligations of peacemaking. This, of course, rules out the PLO.

Adoption of the "non-aligned" amendment would force Israel to withdraw its own resolution; or, if the Assembly President were to decide that it could not be retracted, to vote against it. Yet that is no reason to deplore the fact of its submission. For it has achieved that which Israel sought: to make crystal-clear its own position in favour of an early resumption of the Geneva talks.

A demurrer to the Israel initiative was yesterday entered by the former Ambassador to the UN, Yosef Tekoah. He claimed that it was wrong for this country to weaken, for paltry reasons of mere propaganda, its principled stand against the General Assembly meddling in, and messing up, the settlement of the Middle East conflict.

The argument appears rather wide of the mark. What Israel in fact has done is to acknowledge the Assembly's right — indeed its duty — to support Security Council resolutions 242 and 338, which provide the only terms of reference for the Geneva conference. By the same token, Israel's resolution denies the right of the Assembly, or for that matter of the Secretary-General, to unilaterally vary those terms.

This is precisely what both the General Assembly and the Secretary-General have done — the Assembly last year by urging that the PLO be invited, as a matter of unalienable right, to Geneva, and Dr. Waldheim earlier this year by soliciting the PLO's advice on the resumption of the peace talks with its participation. These two actions serve as the basis of resolutions offered by the Syrians and the Egyptians in the current Middle East debate.

Both resolutions, but especially the Egyptian, which is viewed as "moderate," are candidates for easy adoption. And both lack any legal validity. They violate the language of the original letters of invitation to the first Geneva session, in December, 1973, which made clear that the addition of invitees would be up to the initial participants; and they ignore the specific commitment given to Israel by the U.S., a co-chairman of the conference.

Doomed though it is, Israel's resolution represents the only workable basis for renewed diplomatic momentum for peace in the area.

Confusion about pensions

THE ARGUMENT that has broken out between the pension funds and the Accountant-General over the Treasury's decision to cut the interest it pays to the funds by one per cent reveals how divorced from any kind of economic reality are the calculations made in some sectors of the social services.

To claim that a reduction from 6.5 to 5.5 per cent in the interest on index-linked bonds sold to the funds will reduce pension entitlements from 70 to 55 per cent of an employee's last wage implies that previously the full pension could be financed out of the funds' own resources; which is of course not the case. All the funds can claim is that the cash flow would remain positive, with more money moving in than goes out, for an appreciable number of years ahead — no more than that.

The optimism that prevailed during the long period of economic boom permitted a certain recklessness. It was possible to fix contributions and benefits that had little relation to each other. Pensioners are linked to the average wage. A 40 per cent pension is guaranteed to persons reaching the age of retirement after only ten years of contributions — all this on the basis of a monthly input equal to 16 per cent of the payroll.

Not only that: the one-tenth of assets which the funds are free to invest at their own discretion is used in the main for giving cheap, non-linked loans to members. Can the taxpayers' official representatives be justly blamed for reducing the interest to a lower figure, when the funds' own members pay half as much as that figure or less?

The Government pleads that it cannot fix general interest rates according to the whim of the pension funds. It has lowered the ceiling on all linked loans from nine to 7.5 per cent throughout the economy, which means that banks cannot manage to pay more than 5.5 or six per cent, even if they want to. Indeed, 5.5 per cent is what the funds used to be receiving, without complaint, during the whole of the 1960s.

The present polemics arise out of a confusion about terms of reference, for which the Government cannot escape responsibility. The pension funds could have been given to understand from the beginning that they are exclusively responsible for their own affairs, as insurance companies are. But since they are compelled to place nine-tenths of their assets at the behest of the Accountant-General, they can justifiably plead that part of the responsibility for balancing the accounts has passed to the Treasury.

The point is that 600,000 fund members have been dunned for contributions month by month since they entered employment, and were promised certain benefits when they retire. The Treasury cannot close its eyes to these circumstances, and pretend they are not its concern.

The Government must make its own calculation about the viability of the pension funds, and ensure that financial provision is made according to an authoritative actuarial plan. Lopping one per cent off the interest paid to the funds as a matter of budgetary convenience suggests that not only the funds, but the Government too, is ducking its long-term obligations.

CYRUS VANCE LAST MAY 'Arabs are the problem'

According to this week's 'Newsweek,' Secretary of State-designate Cyrus Vance said that it would be necessary to put heavy pressure on Israel. Last May, Vance spoke in a different vein.

By WOLF BLITZER

WASHINGTON. — SECRETARY OF State-designate Cyrus Vance has rarely spoken in public about the Arab-Israeli conflict. But in an interview on May 23 with WNSB, a local New York City television station, the light-lipped diplomat was relatively frank in replying to questions on the Middle East.

Asked how far America's commitment to Israel should go, Vance replied: "I think this is a very important commitment. I think that we are committed to the survival of Israel. There isn't any question about that. We've said this many, many times, and this should remain a fundamental and cardinal principle of our foreign policy."

Pressed whether this commitment meant that the U.S. would go to war to save Israel from being destroyed, Vance said: "If Israel were about to be driven into the sea, my answer would be yes. If they were to be extinguished as a country, we would be yes."

Vance was asked how he would have handled the Middle East situation after the 1973 war. As to the initial disengagement, he thought that Kissinger had done "a splendid job." But he asserted that after the initial disengagement agreements in Sinai and on the Golan Heights the step-by-step diplomatic approach "was almost doomed to failure."

"There were too many loose pieces that were not being brought together," he explained, "and my own feeling is that in the long run, any ultimate settlement in the Middle East is going to require some participation and cooperation from the Soviet Union."

In the same interview, Vance said that the Soviet Union seemed "totally committed to the harsher Arab point of view," while the U.S. seemed to be "somewhat nebulously committed to Israel."

He suggested that Washington and Moscow "thrust it out...and then discuss this with the other parties concerned and see if you can find a way to move forward." But "the real problem" was that several Arab states continued to reject Israel's existence.

VANCE WAS CRITICAL of the Sinai accord of September 1975 because it split off Egypt — with its relatively moderate approach — from that of the other Arab states.

As a result, Egypt now had "less influence, so it seems to me, than they had in the past, and Syria and the others [are] by themselves...And it is obviously going to take some pulling together of these peoples before you're going to be able to seriously get down to negotiating a final, comprehensive agreement."

Since being named, Vance is reported to have confided that the Middle East ranks third in his order of priorities, the negotiation of a U.S.-Soviet treaty on strategic arms limitation remaining the most critical foreign policy problem facing Washington, and the international economic situation being second.

If Vance devotes much of his time to his No.1 and No.2 problems, his Undersecretary for Political Affairs and his Assistant Secretary for Near East Affairs, whoever they are, will probably be assigned the major responsibility in handling the Middle East.

POSTSCRIPTS

THIS IS A REQUIEM for the beret, a continental form of the Scottish tam-o'-shanter which may soon be as antiquated as a full-bottomed wig. An AP report from Paris says that if it were not for military orders (black berets for tank crews, red berets for parachutists, presumably), French beret manufacturers would go out of business.

The headgear made famous by tennis champion Borotra, and once favoured by the Prince of Wales, by Marc Chagall and Dizzy Gillespie, not to mention legions of the less well-known, is now worn in France only by a handful of provincials or a tourist who wants to think he's looking French.

One of the reasons for the decline is that most men now prefer to go bareheaded (which is why all those films of the '30s look so odd, with the men wearing hats everywhere all the time). Another is that Frenchmen have taken to umbrellas like ducks to water.

Said one manufacturer: "The army has hung on to berets but they may change some day. They're always 20 years behind the times." Elias, poor beret. You have gone with the snows of yesterday. F.D.

VIEWPOINT

Reform and the Aliya argument

THE RECENT conventions in Israel of the World Union for Progressive Judaism and of the Conservative Movement afforded renewed opportunities for local political and Zionist leaders to restate a scandalous theory. This is that these representatives of pluralism in Judaism must reinforce their claims for religious recognition by massive aliya to Israel. This idea was also endorsed by Golda Meir some years ago.

At present neither Progressive nor Conservative Jews enjoy any formal religious rights in Israel. Their rabbis (except for a handful of Conservative rabbis) may not officiate at marriages. They have no status with the burial societies. They receive no allocations from the budget of the Ministry of Religious Affairs or from local Religious Councils, on which they are also badly denied representation. They encounter difficulties in relating premises for holding religious services. Owners of halls are threatened with cancellation of their Kashrut licences if they let to Reform. Recently Chief Rabbi Ovadia Yosef inhibited a printer from working on a Reform Prayer Book.

Nothing that Progressive Jews do in Israel improves their situation. If they make converts to Judaism by following strict Halachic procedures these conversions are still not accepted. Although the Law of Return does not specify that conversion must be Halachic, and thereby recognizes Reform converts as Jews, the Israeli rabbinate refuses to deal with them as such in the area where its writ runs in Israel: that of personal status.

What, then, does the suggestion that increased aliya of Progressive Jews would alter the situation amount to? At best, evasion, at worst an infamous and immoral attitude.

Were a quarter of a million Progressive Jews to arrive in Israel this year the situation would not change, because Coalition considerations would remain paramount and the Mafdal would veto any change in the official religious status of the Reform. Unless... these Reformers organized politically and exercised, clout on the ruling political parties.

What does this mean? It means that religious freedom for many Jews in Israel and the Diaspora does not depend on principle but on numbers. For the many, or the politically organized, there is religious freedom, for the others not. God is firmly aligned, in the eyes of recent spokesmen for the Israeli Government and the Jewish Agency, on the side of the large battalions.

If numbers are all, we must reinterpret Jewish history and make changes. Certainly the Al Hanesim prayer must disappear from the Hanukkah liturgy. What right have Jewish minorities in the Diaspora to demand rights from the Gentile majority? Need one labour this point?

But the matter goes deeper than this. The Reform Movement today is deeply committed to aliya, and an increasing number of Reform Jews are making the decision to come here although they are previously made fully aware of the religious disabilities they will encounter.

Nevertheless, there are deep heart-searchings and divisions within the world Reform Movement. For years now the leadership there has been waging a fierce internal battle. The policy has been to damp down public criticism of Israel's denial of religious recognition to Reform. This, from a reluctance to add to Israel's troubles in these grim years of grave danger.

THE DISPUTE nearly erupted at the World Progressive Conference in Jerusalem in 1968 when a proposal to march on the Western Wall and hold a prayer-meeting there was almost implemented. There were sharp internal discussions before this year's convention. The argument against rocking the boat was fiercely countered by those who adduced the example of Gush Emunim at Kfar duma and Kiryat Arba. These elements, it was stated, had not hesitated to increase Israel-Arab tensions by their anti-Government measures, in the end the "quietly" policy prevailed.

But the protest elements against gathering strength. And these voices are heard not only in the grass roots, but in some top echelons. There was much verbiage talk at the recent convention of invoking financial sanctions to reinforce Reformist demands. The leader of one of America's largest congregations pointed out that Reform donors and workers were responsible for much more than half of monies of all kinds raised for Israel in the U.S.

There was also another reaction: the suggestion that only political clout will secure the moral rights of Reform in Israel. Some asked if the time was not ripe for Reform to put the political here. At this stage there was an overwhelmingly negative reaction to this suggestion. Reform leaders point to the deadly effect which existing religious disabilities have had on Judaism as a religious argument against this gambit.

The writer was Chief Reform Rabbi Johanesburg before returning to Israel last year.

SMOKING AND THE HALACHA

To the Editor of The Jerusalem Post Sir, — I have a great respect for Chief Rabbi David Halevy's fresh and original approach to halacha as it affects our daily life. But he really goes too far in stating (December 2) that smoking is forbidden according to halacha, on the basis of Deuteronomy (4:15): "Take therefore good care of yourselves."

According to such an approach, "large salted fish, old salted cheese, mushrooms and truffles, and wine fresh from the barrel" to enumerate only a few, should be forbidden according to halacha. Does not Maimonides include them, and many other common foods, among those "which are exceedingly harmful to the body and should never be eaten"? (See the remarkable Chapter 4 of his Eluhot Deot.)

As far as my knowledge goes, the only discussion as to the prohibition of tobacco in the halacha is with regard to the fast day of Tisha B'Av, the point at issue being whether it should be prohibited because it constitutes a pleasure. Please, dear Rabbi Halevy, don't add more prohibitions to the weighty mass which bears down on us. LOUIS I. RABINOWITZ Jerusalem.

WASTE OF TIME AND MONEY

To the Editor of The Jerusalem Post Sir, — Tourism Minister Moshe Kol's proposed slander suit against Mayor Teddy Kollek is a prime example of misdirected zeal by a public servant. Surely, Mayor Kollek's criticism of Minister Kol's disbursement of funds is a legitimate sort of criticism which demands specific public rebuttal (if wrong) in stead of a lawsuit for slander.

Furthermore, what right has Minister Kol to use the legal adviser of his ministry to represent him in his personal lawsuit? Petty lawsuits like this one are a waste of time for the Ministry of Tourism and a waste of time and money for the courts. DR. ALAN SCHMEIDLER Kfar Saba.

"DIAL 14"

To the Editor of The Jerusalem Post Sir, — According to the words of the committee of the "Dial 14" operators in Jerusalem (November 28), operators are entitled to an increase of 30% in income. Why? Not because they are doing any more work, or working harder, but because, through no fault on their part, their work has been made easier and faster and they no longer have to read the script.

In their mercenary crassness, their heartlessness toward their brethren in spirit from that of the same swindlers now serving prison sentences. They all saw an opportunity and an excuse to enrich themselves — and took it.

Let's have more pay for men who work. But if a machine is introduced which increases output (without creating unemployment), the extra output belongs to the employer, as reported.
